NATURAL HISTORY, though both an uleful and ornamental branch of education, a feldom cultivated with that ardour, or ranked fo igh in the estimation of those who superintend the offraction of youth, as its real importance deserves. When young, we have a great propentity to con-Implate the works of Nature. Curiofity is then drongs and the objects of gratification are innumerable. Inflered Instead of neglecting this early propentity, it ought to be cherished, and made the foundation of uleful knowledge, and of elegant amusement. It is unnecessary to institute a comparison between the utility of Natural History and that of the other sciance; for it is the fource from which they are dedy of Nature.

About twelve years ago, in a conversation with the late respectable and ingenious Lord Kames, upon the neglect of natural knowledge, his Lordship suggested the idea of composing a book on the Philosophy of Natural History. He proposed, that the productions of Nature, which are almost infinite, should, instead of being treated of individually, be arranged under general heads; that, in each of these divisions, the known facts, as well as reasonings, should be collected and methodised in the form of regular discourses. ed and merhodifed in the form of regular discourses; that as few technical terms as possible should be em-ployed; and that all the useful and amusing views ariling from the different subjects, should be exhibited in fuch a manner as to convey both pleasure and

This task his Lordship was pleased to think me not altogether unqualified to attempt. The idea pleased me. I thought, that a work of this kind, if properly executed, might excite a taste for examining the various objects which every where solicit our attention. A habit of observation refines our feelings. It is a fource of interesting amusement, prevents idle or vicious propentities, and exalts the mind to a love of virtue and of rational entertainment. I likewise reflected, that many men of real learning and abilities often betray an ignorance, on the most common subjects of Natural History, which it is painful to remark.

Since the above period, I have been occasionally employed in collecting and digesting materials from the most respectable sources. These materials are interspersed with such observations and reflections as occurred to me from peruling the multifarious subjects of which I have ventured to treat. I knew that a deliberate examination of the numerous writers, from Aristotle downwards, would require a considerable portion of time. But the interruptions of business, the translating of a work so voluminous as the Natural History of the Count de Bussian, and other circumstances which it is unnecessary to mention, rendered my progress slower than I wished. I am now, however, so far advanced, as, with much diffidence, to fubmit my labours to public

An enumeration of the Principal Contents will, perhaps, convey a more clear idea of the nature of the performance than a multiplicity of words. But It thought it would not be improper to prefix a fhort account of the circumstances and maisses which in duced me to engage in an undertaking so extensive, so useful, and so difficult to perform with tolerable

HINTS TO PLAYERS. CHAP. II.

ET fome High School boy, to give you a least lerable idea of the Latin tongue, and if your tutor is in the fourth form, he may also add a smattering of Greek. I have known a lamentable ignorance of the dead languages, in some very respect-able personages of your protession, and I have wit-nessed Cardinal Wolfey represented by a gentleman who knew no language, but a bastard kind of Englifh. I recollect also, of having feen a performer, who had only one word of Latin to pronounce in his part, and which ought to have been accented aurong, lay the emphasis upon the right syllable, from absolute ignorance; and, by this means, he totally marred a most ingenious conceit intended by the stage-writer, to the great mortification of the

Tom Lancashire, my old acquaintance, of face-tious memory, used to furnish me with many thea-trical anecdotes, and with some of which, I may, perhaps, occasionally entertain you. Smoking a pipe one night at Tom's, (the tobacco was right Maryland, and was, I think, of Gillespie's manufacturing; though, in a circumstance of such impor-tance, I will not at this distance of time be posi-tive); I say, taking a whiff one evening at Lanky's, he told me, that his first appearance in Edinburgh. was in the character of Otter, in Johnson's Silent Woman. "I had," faid Tom, "in the early period of my life, driven a coach; but becoming difgusted with that sedentary profeshon, and meeting with a disappointment in love, I threw it up, and bethought myself of going upon the stage. I need not tell you, my good friend Dramaticus, that in our profession, as in every other, there are a number of low illiterate fellows, though there are others a gain, who are as respectable men as in any; and truly, I myself, might, at the period I am speaking of, have been included in the first class. Our Manager having got up the Silent Woman, we had a tolerable show of heads in the pit; but just before the curtain rose, the gentleman who was to play Otter, was suddenly taken ill; and sudden illness, you know, is what a player, of all animals, except a canary bird, is most subject to. In this situation, and as our company was by no means strong, our Manager was in some perplexity, till he extricated himself from this dilemma, by requesting of the audence, that they would be graciously pleased to accept of my reading the part of Captain Thomas Ot-Accordingly, this not having been objected to, though not, perhaps, entirely approven of, foon af-ter, on I came. In Ad V. Scene III. there is, you know, a very learned disquisition, as I have been told, upon the nature of divorces, carried on, as my evil genius would have it, in Latin, and maas my evil genius would have it, in Latin, and managed, it is said, with an dinterrupted reciprocation of smartness between the two interlocators, Otter and Catherd the Barber. I had, at the time, the Somersetshire twang is great perfection; and when I came to the word copula, which you know frequently occurs in that seene, I pronounced it cupola. Instantly, a set of fastisious, ill-natured fellows in the pit, for such there will be in all mixed companies, and especially, I think, in this city, set up such a roar, as totally disconcerted me, and about ten minutes. I was amazed at what this meant; for, as I had the I was amazed at what this meant; for, as I had the book in my hand, and thought I could read English tolerably well, I could not comprehend where the joke lay. Till at last, I was fairly pushed off, by one of our gentlemen who played Moraje, and who had, it feems, been bred at Oxford; and when we had all got together into the green-room, after this unfortunate scene was over, he there explained, to unfortunate icene was over, he there explained, to my unspeakable mortification, the repeated blunders I had so pertinaciously insisted on, in this unsucky commentary upon the canon law; and ever after, I assure you, I never ventured upon Latin, surther than Anno Domini, with a smack, in Boniface, in the Stratagem."

I fmiled at poor Tom's mortification; and calling for t'other bottle, left him in better flumour with himself. But I only mention the story to you, without presuming to draw any conclusion from it.

I have already given you a hint as to your jokes, when upon the stage. But as it is possible that your talent may not lie that way, in fuch a case, I would advife you to fay fome very good things now and then, and which, you know, are recommended in fome of the papers of the World. The phrase, for instance, of Hardams No. 37. (an ingredient so effential in the composition, or making of a tragedy) took its rife, you know, from an extemporary interpolation of Foote's. Why this fame finiff was called by the number of Thirty-feven, rather than by any other, you may enquire of your friend Mr Campbell in the Luckenbooths, whose youth, discretion, and good-breeding, to say nothing of the edifying qualities of his snuff, point him out as the fittel person to whom you can apply for advice and influence of the state of to whom you can apply for advice and instructions in these abstructions. He may also be useful to you in polishing your works before publication; at least, he can do them no harm.

Continue to cultivate the friendship of Mr Camp-Should you ever think it proper to publith your works in volumes, he may become an excellent outless for them j for, you know, he confurmes a great deal of paper in the course of his trade. The stagewriters, too, who buy at his shop, upon your recom-mendation (and I am determined in future to deal mendation (and I am determined in future to deal with the man) will by this means often have an opportunity of examining detached fragments of your composition, and which, God knows, among the multiplicity of new publications, might otherwise have cluded all our fearch. If you are acquainted with any trunk-maker, too, it might not be amiss if you gave him a beef-stake once a fortnight. Verbum (ablent).

If, unfortunately, you cannot reach either a joke of a good thing, I would recommend punning to you, and which is perhaps a degree lower on the feale of wit than the other two. I know very well, that by a certain class of men, this practice is held in the utmost contempt; but do not let your judgment be swayed by such hypercritics. Some of the most celebrated Greek writers have given their suffrage in favour of puns. The name of Polynices, one of Oedipus's sons, means in the original, you know, much quarrelling; and in the altercations between the two brothers in Alchylus, Sophoeles, and Euripides, very good use is made of this conceit. Terence has his inceptio est amentium, non amantium; and, you know, that Aristotle treats very seriously of puns, divides them into several classes, and recommends the use of them accordingly. recommends the use of them to orators. I need not remind you that Shakespeare is sull of them, particularly in his Merry Wives of Windsor. Compose your puns for the evening before breakfast, which is a great faving of time.

By a proper attention to the hints I have already given you, and to those which I may yet bestow up on you, should your seture conduct entitle you to a continuance of my notice, perhaps you may one day become a Manager yourfelf. And do not be flart-led at this supposition. Oliver Cromwell, you know. was a brewor till he was upwards of forty years of age; and the great Duke of Marlborough was or ginally a court page, and indeed, to the end of his life, could never spell his mother tongue. When you have mounted to the top of the ladder of preferment, do not hick it from under you, as certain heroes on another occasion are sometimes apt rathis to do, but demean yourfelf with moderation. that you comply in every thing with the taffe of the rabble; and endeavour to encourage rope-dancers, tumblers, posture-masters; or, as Horace states

" Anthubatarum collegia, pharmacopolise,

" Mendici, mimae, balatrones; hoc genus omne;" to exhibit their feate, where Siddons, and Weston, and Pope have trod. Take my word for it, nothing can be more instructive or more elegant, or afort greater pleasure to a refined audience, than to fig 6 fellow's face looking out from under his backlide, of to fee him balance a young puppy in a chair upon his chin.

FROM THE LONDON PAPERS, OA. 7.

Utrecht, Od. 3. The regency of Berno has thought it necessary to address a missive to the States General, intimating their great furprife at the condust of the States of Holland, in having ordered the troops to march that had been furnished by the Regency, for the fole use of the United Provinces. It is well known to the author of this measure, that the Swiss regiments aluded to, depend upon the generality, and have no connection whatever with any of the particular bodies that form the confederacy. The faid Regency has further declared, that as the States of Holland have thus manifestly encroached upon the known privileges of the Stadtholder, the troops in question must, of course, receive their orders from the States General; that of all things it would be the most horrid to fee them, in the event of a civil war, fighting against each other; and that if Holland perfits in claiming them as her stipendiaries, the Regency, as in duty bound, will demand them to be reflored to their country.

Since the above proceeding, the Regency of Berne has given formal notice to the commanders of the faid regiments, that they are to obey no orders but fuch as may iffue to them from the States General.

His most Serene Highness has written a letter to the States of Holland, loudly complaining of their late behaviour to him, and infifting upon having those prerogatives reftored to him, which, for fome time he had been fo wantonly divested of. He maintains that, according to the constitution of the country, those prerogatives cannot be alienated from him; and declares, that if the States will not do justice to him, he will do justice to him, he will do justice to himfelf.

The Dutch regiments which were cantoned at Maestricht, Bergen-op-Zoom, and Bois-le-Duc, are now all arrived upon the territory of the province of Holland; and orders have been given to the feveral commanders, to deliver no passports to the foldiers.

L O N D O N, Ga. 7. Their Majesties, accompanied by the Princess Royal and Princess Sophia, last night honoured the Theatre of Drury-lane with their presence. The house was brilliant, and full to overslowing. A strange circumstance happened last Thursday at Drury-Lane theatre, where the Royal Family were then prefent. It was literally as follows : - A boy among the crowd, making up to the door, put into the hand of the ferjeant of the guards a written paper, or letter, purporting that the K.'s life would be in danger on his return from the theatre. The ferjeant initantly delivered the paper to his officer, the officer to the Lord in waiting, and his Lordship to the K. His Majesty, with the utmost compo-fure, read the contents, burst into laughter, and with great propriety, and the utmost feeming difregard, gave it back to the Lord in waiting, who returned it to the officer, who deliberately placed it in his wailtcoat pocket. And thus ended the notice that had been taken of this ridiculous and contemptible defign, if indeed there was any ferious defign at all in the business.

The flate of the Princess Elifabeth's health, we are forry to fay, is a cause for well-founded public regret; fo many relapses of a defluction in so young a conftitution, are alarming; particularly as the feafon of the year grows daily more unfavourable to the complaint her Highness is aflicted with.

We hope and truft that those papers are in error, which state that the export of coals to France come within the treaty. The abitract which the Treating have handfomely laid before the public, fays nothing of coals. If coals had been admitted, the article would have been truly fubject to the cenfure of Parliament. It would not only have tended to enhance the price in England to the oppression of the poor, and the injury of our manufactures; but it is a fee perfectly understood, that the French want only coals to rival us in many of our principal manusce tures. Coals are too bulky for fmuggling, and with out coal they cannot bring any manufacture of iron to a state of prosperity.

Extract of a letter from London, Oct. 7.

"Owing to Mr Pitt's indisposition, and absence from town on a visit to his mother, no public business of any consequence has been transacted.

On account of this, and a relapse the Princess

Elizabeth has had, his Majelly does not come from Windfor till Wednesday next. We are forry to add, that, after the unwearied attention paid to her comphint, the is likely to fall a victim to it.

"The enfuing fellion of Parliament will most undoubtedly prove the most interesting one we have had for many years path. The farther confideration of the charges against Mr Haftings—the Commercial Treaty with France—the Convention with Spain—the adjusting the yet substitting differences with Ireland—the renewal of the Treaty with Ruffia-the Fisheries-the fale of the Crown landsthe establishment of the Prince of Wales-the confolidating the Excise and Customs - and many other things of importance, press themselves forward upon the legislature for an early confideration.

"One reason of the délay there was in forming the Treaty of Commerce with France, was a doubt what part the Court of France, if any, would take in the affairs of Holland; and it is faid, that an a-greement between Grear Britain and France not to interfere but by mutual confent, was made a grand preliminary to the treaty, and without which none would have been entered upon.

Mr Frewin, appointed the new Commissioner of the Excise, owes it entirely to his being engaged in confolidating the Excise and Customs; an undertaking, it is faid, that is nearly brought to a degree of perfection, and which, when finished, will, it is afferted, furprise the public, equally as to the simplification of business, and the valt faving it will make to the flate.

"The general conversation is almost wholly engroffed by the Commercial Treaty formed with France. From the articles, it would feem that French wines and brandy will be to be had much cheaper than at present; but teas we still find dearer and worfe than ever, though, by the Commuta-tion act, they were to have been fold cheaper and better. The allowing us to reduce the duty on the wines of Portugal, is a condescension on the part of France that many people wonder at; for the Mini-fler having it in his power to reduce it as low as he pleases, he certainly can reduce it in such a manner as to entirely do away every advantage the French thought they should derive from a reduction of the tury on their wines.

"It is a fact, that the duty on the importation of Port wines will be considerably lowered. Indeed, every one must see this to be absolutely necessity." fary, in order to prevent a total abolition of the use of the wines of Portugal; because, if French wines are to be fold as cheap, or nearly as cheap, as Port wines, their peculiar flavour, their contributing more to the health than Port wines, besides the novelty there will be in many people having them, will bring them prefently into general use. In order to prevent Port wines, therefore, being wholly excluded, it will be necessary to lower the duty on them; and, in determining how far it ought to be reduced, no little difficulty will arise, because, on this alone, every thing the French hope for will depend."

Monday night, a goldsmith's shop in the Parlia-ment Close, was robbed of silver plate and jewellery work, to the amount of upwards of one hundred guineas value. The thief or thieves had, by fonce means, got themselves concealed in the shop, till it was locked up at night, supposed by getting down a trap-stair, which leads to a working shop below ground. Great deliberation had been used in this business, a candle having been lighted from a peat; which is generally kept alive all night in the furnaces of goldfiniths, by which an opportunity was af-forded of felecting what was most valuable, and none of the plated work was carried off. The thieves made their escape at one of the windows. It is only lately that the fame shop was broke into, and goods to the amount of 25 l. and upwards carried away, as formerly mentioned. The fame industrious tradefman met with a fimilar misfortune some years ago. These losses have reduced a most worthy and well-deserving citizen, at a very advanced period of life, to a state, we are afraid, not far distant from industrial tradefield. indigence. It would therefore redound greatly to the honour of some public-spirited person to set on soot a subscription for the relief of this Gentleman, whose birth and manners in every respect entitle him to the favour of the public. [For particulars of the above robbery, fee advertisement in this night's paper.

Early on Friday morning, as a corporal and foldier were going alongst the Trongate, Glasgow, after having relieved the centinel on duty at the Customhouse, they observed two fellows endeavouring to force open a shop-door, who, upon seeing the soldiers approaching, thought proper to settie to a neighbouring close. As soon as the soldiers came up, they seized one of the villains, upon which the other fnapped a piftol repeatedly in their faces; but providentially it declined its office, by misling fire. Notwithstanding fo sudden and dangerrus an attack, the corporal boldly kept his hold, whilet the foldier was doing all in his power to make fure the other; who, proving too powerful, though he received fe-veral thrufts, made his escape, taking along with him the foldier's musket. The foldier thinking it improper to pursue, returned to assist his comrade with the other, whom they conducted fafely to the guard house. A pistol, of exquisite workmanship, was found upon the prisoner, loaded with about three inches of slag shot, and is so constructed as to hold a small sword in its barrel, which springs out immediately on the discharge of the piece. A number of wedges, and other implements, were found lying about the door, by nreans of which the fellows, had they not been diffurbed, would have effected their purpose in a few seconds. The mustet was found in a close a considerable way off; the bayonet appeared to have been pretty deeply immerged in the body of the villain, as the point of it was very much stained with blood. We hear a fobfeription is fet on foot to reward the two foldiers for their undaunted behaviour. Same morning, a house in the Gorbals was broke into, and a quantity of mens and womens cloaths

A correspondent writes us, that, on the 22d ult. there were great rejoicings at Inverary, it being the birth-day of the Marquis of Lorn. In the evening the town was illuminated; large bonfires were piled up in different places; and the country gentlemen, for fix miles round, erected bonfires on feveral eminences. Mr Crawford, admiral of the herring fishery, ordered all the boats to affemble on the loch, with their falls up, illuminated with lamus , at forme time, fley-rockets and other fireworks, together with a small transparent balloon, were let off from the castle. The whole had the most pleasing effect on the minds of the frectators. The night concluded with a ball; and every one returned home highly fatisfied with the pleafure their noble chief, his Grace the Duke of Argyle, had afforded them.

To the Printer of the Caledonian Mercury.

N looking over the file of Mercuries, on my return to this country, I was equally furprifed and shocked to read of the death of the Honourable Augustus William Firzroy, third fon of Lord Southampton. I was early and intimately acquainted with the noble youth, who did not so much de-rive luftre from his exalted birth, as reflect honour on it by his principles and actions. Candour and warmth of affection, a quick and delicate sense of honour, generofity and liberality of fentiment, with gallantry and intrepidity of spirit, rarely to be equal-led, not to be surpassed, formed the leading seatures

He had ferved his country with reputation, in the feveral quarters of the globe, for the space of thirteen successive years, under the Admitals Gayton, Rodney, Parker, Howe, and Sir Edward Hughes, and the Commodores Sir Richard Bickerton, Andrew Mitchel, and Charles Hughes; had a share in most of the actions of the fleet, of which Britain had cause to boast, during that period; and was just returned, captain of the Bristol man of war, from India, in which quarter he had ferved the last four

His promotion he owed not to Court favour or family folicitation. It was well earned with long and diftinguished service in all the inferior stations of the profession, and spontaneously bestowed by the several commanders, and particularly by the two last named, as the reward of well-known personal and professional merit. The approbation and confidence of his commanders, and the efteen and love as well of them as of his brother officers, of both the fervices, are his true and best eulogium .- But alas !

THE RESERVE OF THE PARTY OF THE To the Printer of the Caledonian Mercury.

HOUGH I own you are not, in general, behind your brethren, in communicating the most early intelligence, yet I cannot help complaining of your unpardonable remissiness in a late instance. Was it from want of information ? or, did you think it below your notice, to communicate to the public, a recent Turtle Feast at Leith, of which all the viotners in Edinburgh and Leith, or reprefentatives for those who could not attend, partook? Whatever your motives might be for so glaring an omission on your part, I can affere you of the fact. These gentlemen dined together, in a most sumptuous manner, the day on which your Magistrates were elected; and, however the Town Council may be sup-posed fond of good living, I have not heard that a Turtle decorated their table on that occasion. If it had, you would no doubt have been ready enough to announce this pièce of intelligence to the public. Your readers, Sir, are not confined entirely to Town Councils. If I am not much milinformed, you are fully as much obliged, for the fale of your paper, to the Society of Vintners, as to any body of mea whatever. Why then overlook them in their convivial meetings? No people know better what good eating and drinking mean; and none are bet-ter entitled to partake of these enjoyments, fince none are more ready to communicate thefe favours to their visitors. Several of the Society of Vintners have complained to me, of what they deem a fludied neglect of yours, in this particular. If you mean again to get into their good graces, or evince your own impartiality, you will, without de-lay, give place to this letter. D. D.
